Grant Wrangler Helps Teachers Find Funds for the Classroom

Grant Wrangler offers free grant headline generator to K-12 educational web sites.

SAN FRANCISCO, CA (September 26, 2007) – School district Web sites can't just update themselves - or can they? School districts across the nation can add dynamic content to their Web sites in the shape of a cowboy and lasso. Grant Wrangler™ (<http://www.grantwrangler.com>), a free service that offers access to over $81 million in classroom grants, has just released the Grant Wrangler Headline Generator, a widget for school and district web sites that automatically displays the latest grant headlines.

The headline generator is available free of charge to K-12 schools, districts, libraries and other educational web sites. The featured grants are updated every two weeks, providing fresh, timely content that allows visitors to access much-needed education grants information. To acquire Grant Wrangler headlines for your district, visit <http://www.grantwrangler.com/howto.html>.

“Grant Wrangler provides an easily accessible way for teachers and administrators to find new sources of funds for classroom and district activities,” said Norton Gusky, Coordinator of Educational Technology at Fox Chapel Area School District in Pennsylvania. “It’s just a matter of clicking on a web page and then connecting with a possible source.”

Grant Wrangler posts grants and awards for K-12 teachers, schools, and students in subject areas ranging from math and science to social studies and art. The site currently lists about 440 grants for classroom resources, youth-led initiatives, teacher professional development opportunities, and monetary recognition. Visitors can search for grants by subject area, grade level, and keyword.
